HISTORY Native Americans inhabited this region for many generations, notably in the sites that are now preserved at Coyote Hills Regional Park west of Quarry Lakes. Quarry Lakes incorporates the boundaries of two Mexican ranchos and the former Mission San Jose lands.

The quarries for which Quarry Lakes is named were established in the mid-19th century. Gravel taken from the banks of Alameda Creek was used in the construction of the transcontinental railroad's western section. After quarrying came to an end, the lakes were used for groundwater recharge by the Alameda County Water District (ACWD), which diverts water from Alameda Creek into the pits.

Quarry Lakes is the culmination of many years of planning and partnership between ACWD and the Park District. The property that now comprises the park was acquired by the two agencies between 1975 and 1992. Of the park's 471 acres, some 350 acres are the lakes. The first phase of park construction began in 1997, when ACWD flattened the slopes of the quarry pit to minimize erosion and sedimentation, and to provide contours more suitable for parkland.

In August 2000 the Park District began creating the parkland's recreational facilities, including turfgrass lawns, picnic areas, shade pavilions, a swim beach, a boat launch ramp, and a trail network. The cost of the project's first phase was $5.8 million, of which $3.65 million was a grant from the City of Fremont Redevelopment Agency. The remainder came from Measure AA, the Park District's open space bond measure approved by voters in 1988.

The result is a beautiful, water-oriented recreation area, which offers recreational activities such as picnicking, boating, swimming, and fishing, as well as hiking and wildlife viewing. The park's trail network connects to the Alameda Creek Regional Trail, which extends from Niles Canyon westward to Coyote Hills and Don Edwards National Wildlife Refuge on San Francisco Bay.

SWIMMING The beach area includes a sandy beach, restrooms, and volleyball courts. Lifeguard service is available in the summer months through September. No water contact of any type is allowed in Willow Slough or Lago Los Osos.

FISHING is permitted in Horseshoe Lake and Rainbow Lake. Lead weights are not allowed. A California fishing license and an EBRPD Daily Fishing Access Permit are required for all anglers age 16 and older. Daily Fishing Access permits may be purchased at the park entry kiosk or at machines located at gate entrances along Alameda Creek Regional Trail. Permit sales fund trout and catfish plants in Horseshoe Lake. For fishing information, see www.ebparks.org.

PICNICKING Picnic sites with barbecues are available on a first-come, first-served basis. There are five reservable sites with space for 35 to 200 people.
